

Hello.

I do not want Indiana's Telephone Privacy law changed for CBA banks to call upon me as desired. The entire purpose of the telephone privacy act was to reduce - and in my case - essentially eliminate telemarketing calls. Now companies, like banks in the CBA, want to do an end-run to this policy by thinking up a creative way to begin telemarketing to me again. I have never bought anything over the phone, do not want to buy anything over the phone, and that's why I believe in the telephone privacy act. I do not want to be solicited by anyone over the phone, whether I have a business relationship with them now or in the past - or not. If I want information or additional services from them, and I already have a business relationship with them, I'll call them or stop into my local bank branch. Calling on me and my family is an intrusion I do not care to have. We've solved this problem once before - let's not let it creep back in.

Thanks for your time.

Respectfully,

Scott Wills and Family

Valparaiso, Indiana